We are the music-makers and the song we are creating is distinctly our own. At the beginning we knew little about music and did not realize that we were, all in our own way, unseen composers.

Our tune was a simple one at first — timid, singular notes ringing out a simple melody. It was too simple to be misunderstood or even challenged.

With the passage of time, however, the simple melody was no longer sufficient.

We were growing, changing and adding dimension to our lives and it was only fitting that our tune change with us.

*We found that the single notes were enriched when combined with other notes. Chords were being formed and harmony
was added.*

Soon our song had sustenance and our harmonious melody could be heard throughout the school. Sometimes our song was appreciated by all; other times we were the only ones who understood.

But the song never stopped — it just grew stronger.

We are the music-makers and, like other composers, we took it upon ourselves to rearrange our melody.

7

*Our rhythm grew restless
and silent
at the same turn,*

causing us to stop and reflect so that we might move forward with greater confidence.

*We are the dream-makers.
Using the melody, harmony and rhythm of our past,* *we hope to shape

our dreams into the music of life.*

*Through her understanding,
sincerity, and
involvement
with individuals
throughout
the school,
she has helped to shape the over-all rhythm
heard within each student.*

*In appreciation for her time and devotion,
we dedicate the 1978 HERALD
to*

The river flows, forever onward.
Made great by the input of small streams and tributaries, the river moves toward its fulfillment with a certain, undying rhythm.

Its journey downstream is not always a smooth one. Obstacles, both external and internal, constantly challenge the calm waters.

Although the river wants to become greater and stronger, its embankments, which direct its flow, sometimes confine and limit its growth. Although the river wants to move on unchallenged, the rocks over which it flows can disrupt its path. Whirlpools and undercurrents threaten to prevent its onward movement. If the river gives in, it will flow aimlessly in circles forever. However, if the river fights back it can swell in rebellious anger and overcome the whirlpools by sheer force of will and move on toward something greater and more challenging.

Like the small streams and tributaries that flow into the river, we, as individuals, have contributed to the overall rhythm of our class. Sometimes that rhythm flowed easily, untroubled by worries or obstructions. At such times we were free to sit back and enjoy the song we had created. At other times, however, we, as individuals and as a class, had to overcome the hurdles in our path. There were times when we thought that rules and regulations were only there to hinder, instead of direct, our growth. Pressures, both social and academic, seemed to challenge our calm frame of mind. But, in the end, like the river, we overcame these obstacles and now are free to move onward in search of our ultimate goals.

May we all be successful in the lives we choose to lead.
